Politics & Social Justice Collection

As social workers, our actions are needed not just in clinics and communities, but in countless policy and advocacy arenas.

Social injustice is present in the structures of local settings, such as schools, and in larger contexts, such as federal policies related to poverty.

The editors of the National Association of Social Workers (NASW) publications have curated this special collection of recent articles published in the four NASW journals that relate to politics and social justice.

The articles in this collection will be freely available through December 31, 2020.
