

Transnational Crime, Crime Control and Security

Call for Proposals

SERIES EDITORS

James Sheptycki is Professor at York University, Canada

Anastassia Tsoukala is tenured Associate Professor of Criminology at the University of Paris-Sud, France

ABOUT THE SERIES

The transnational politics of crime, crime control and insecurity became more contested in the aftermath of the #MeToo Movement, Occupy, Black Lives Matter, Extinction Rebellion and the global panic surrounding the Covid-19 pandemic. The result is a catastrophic imaginary coloured by the precautionary logics of a world system troubled by systemic risk. Borders have been reinforced as strategic resources in the battle against these imagined threats. As these logics become pervasive, security measures are invoked in the effort to control ill-imagined sources of harm, and the consequences are not ambiguous. The language of insecurity is deterritorialized, raising further theoretical challenges and practical difficulties. Nonetheless, the language of security-control is a primary driver of global authoritarian drift. Research and scholarship concerning these issues touches upon crucial features of the world system. This series offers wide inter-disciplinary scope for scholarship exploring these central aspects of global governance and governance globally.

CONTACT FOR PROPOSALS

For more information or general queries, please contact the series editors:

James Sheptycki (jshep@yorku.ca), Anastassia Tsoukala (tsoukala.anastassia@gmail.com)

Or the Palgrave Editor: Josephine.Taylor@palgrave.com.

Proposal forms, and information about publishing with Palgrave can be found on the Palgrave website:
palgrave.com/gp/book-authors/publishing-guidelines/submit-a-proposal