Post Type: Full Time

Contract Type: Permanent

Release Date: Tuesday 20 April 2021

Closing Date: 23.59 hours BST on Monday 10 May 2021 (unless otherwise stated)

Reference: LSSJ-024-21

The School of Social Policy, Sociology and Social Research (SSPSSR) is seeking to appoint two criminologists who can contribute to the School's outstanding research performance and who are committed to high-quality teaching. Applications are encouraged from people with growing international reputations and the demonstrated potential to be research leaders in their field.

We are looking for candidates with strong emerging research profiles, who will be able to make a substantial contribution to research in the School. We are open to applications from criminologists with a wide variety of research interests but are particularly keen to receive applications from those who can add to the fields of criminology that we already cover.

As Lecturer in Criminology you will:

- develop, teach and keep under review modules on the undergraduate and postgraduate programmes
- contribute to the research standing of the School through high quality publications, research grants and the supervision of research students
- contribute to the development and promotion of the School's criminology profile
- take on an administrative role as required

To be successful in the role you will have/be:

- A PhD in a relevant criminology or a relevant social science discipline (or equivalent).
- An experienced teacher, dedicated to supporting students and exploring innovative pedagogical approaches
- Experience of high-quality research and publications in Criminology or similar field

The School of Social Policy, Sociology and Social Research (SSPSSR)

Our School is one of the largest departments of its type in the UK. We have a strong research culture and in REF 2014 the School retained its very high research standing with the largest submission to the Social Policy and Social Work Panel. It was rated fourth in the UK in terms of research quality, and second in terms of research power.

SSPSSR is proud to be an Athena SWAN bronze award holder.

The Kent Criminology Group (KCG)

We have an existing vibrant and distinguished criminology group with an award-winning profile. The Kent Criminology Group has been at the forefront of the development of the discipline within and beyond the UK, with members playing an active role in Networks, editorial boards and steering committees.

Criminology staff are actively engaged in research collaboration with members of the wider School (sociology, social policy, cultural studies) and work closely with members of our large social policy-oriented research units.

You will be supported to develop an outstanding criminology career in an exciting, encouraging and successful School that has achieved excellence in both research and teaching.

We particularly welcome applications from black, Asian and minority ethnic candidates as they are under-represented at this level in this area

Please note that we prioritise applications from current University of Kent redeployees. We will let you know if this post is to be filled by a redeployee as, in this instance, your application will unfortunately not be taken forward

Applications must be made via the University's online application system; CVs or details sent directly to the department or via email cannot be considered.

The University of Kent values diversity and promotes equality at all levels

Due to the current COVID-19 outbreak, all interviews will take place remotely.

From 1 January 2021, non-British and non-Irish nationals who do not already hold a UK immigration status will be required to obtain a visa in order to be able to work in the UK. A new points-based system will be implemented which will treat EEA and non-EEA citizens equally. For further information please visit the UK Visas & Immigration website.
