

How the Criminal Justice System's COVID-19 Response has Provided Valuable Lessons for Broader Reform

To better understand the challenges that the COVID-19 pandemic has created within the criminal justice system, and how the various sectors of the system have adapted to those challenges, the NIJ-supported Priority Criminal Justice Needs Initiative conducted a series of panel workshops with representatives of different sectors within the system.

Panels focused on law enforcement, the court system, institutional corrections, community corrections, victim services providers, and community organizations.

Read a research brief that presents key lessons learned and recommendations offered by panel workshop participants.
