COVID 19: A catalyst to automate protection order petitions to support self-represented litigants

Ayyoub Ajmi

Key points for practitioners

- COVID-19 required innovation to expand access to legal services by survivors seeking orders of protection from abuse.
- Online portals can provide education and an automated process for applying for protective orders that is superior to paper or even online forms.
- Open-access low-cost tools are available for building and implementing automated solutions for access to justice.
- Building online solutions for access to justice requires an investment in convening stakeholders to discover opportunities and barriers and a phased implementation with testing and feedback.

Lack Of Oversight Apparent In COVID-19 Outbreak in Prisons, Jails

Prisons and jails are considered closed facilities. Few visitors gain access to them even though they house people for months, years, decades, and, sometimes, entire lifetimes. As Justice Anthony Kennedy wrote in a 2015 opinion, "Prisoners are shut away-out of sight, out of mind" while their conditions of confinement are "too easily ignored" by the public.
