Journal of Criminological Research, Policy and Practice

The Journal of Criminological Research, Policy and Practice has extended the paper submission date for the special issue: Recent developments in the assessment, management and treatment of psychopathy. Extension date: 9th of October 2022.

Over the past five years, new developments have been observed in the assessment, treatment and theoretical underpinnings of psychopathy. This special issue will allow these perspectives to be considered whilst placing an emphasis on applied research and where an interdisciplinary approach will also be encouraged. The special issue will capture psychopathy across a range of populations, thus moving away from the view of psychopathy predominantly as a forensic concern.

Consequently, this special issue seeks to promote innovative work that adopts new scholarly, methodological and conceptual approaches to understand psychopathy. Manuscripts accepted for this issue may, for example, include topics that capture:

- Conceptualisations and new theories of psychopathy;
- The alignment of psychopathy to recent developments in DSM and ICD;
- The relationship between psychopathy, risk and offending behaviour;
- New developments in the assessment and treatment of psychopathy;
- An exploration of psychopathy and its structure across populations.
