

OXFORD UNIVERSITY PRESS

Commemorating the 100th anniversary of Social Forces

2022 marks 100 years since the founding of Social Forces. Over the last century, the journal has evolved its focus from sociology and social work in the American South to become a global forum for interdisciplinary social research. Each issue of this special, centennial volume includes topical essays and sections on well-studied topics from the journal, penned by the Sociology faculty of the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill. Reflect back on such topics as race and colorism, immigration, and war.

Join us in celebrating a century of cutting-edge social research with free access to all centennial essays of Volume 101 and their cited papers. Issue 1 is available to read now.

Browse the collection

+++++

Read High-Impact Articles

Enjoy a selection of some of the most cited, most read, and most discussed articles from recent years. This collection is just a sample of the impressive body of research from Social Forces.

Read Now

High-Impact Articles

Established in 1922, Social Forces is recognized as a global leader among social research journals. Social Forces publishes articles of interest to a general social science audience and emphasizes cutting-edge sociological inquiry as well as explores realms the discipline shares with psychology, anthropology, political science, history, and economics. Social Forces is published by Oxford University Press in partnership with the Department of Sociology at the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill.

OUP has granted free access to a selection of some of the most cited, most read, and most discussed articles from recent years. These articles are just a sample of the impressive body of research from the journal. The articles have been made freely available through December 31, 2021. [[[[Comment HJ Kerner: It seems that the offer for free download is still being valid!]]]]